The illustration shows a few of the many odd pieces of ironwork that once furnished the old fireplaces in Sussex. Among the articles shown are old ratchet trammels, ham hooks for suspending hams while being smoked in the wide chimneys, spit bars for roasting joints, caged spit bars for roasting geese, clockwork jacks for turning the spits, meat forks, wafer irons, an old wick lamp, ornamental pot hooks, log tongs, andirons, and in the centre foreground a pipe rack of iron to hang upon a crane. In this the long clay pipes were dried above the fire at the country inns.

ARTHUR TODHUNTER

414, MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY

AN intensive Campaign during the past six weeks has resulted in my bringing together an important and highly interesting collection of Old English Mantel-pieces, Andirons, Grates, Firebacks, and other Fireside Equipment, a selection from which is illustrated in the enclosed pamphlet. The old stone mantels of the sixteenth century have given me particular pleasure, because I had not hoped to secure pieces of such rarity. The old wrought iron cranes show what a large amount of ingenuity was expended by our forefathers in the proper fitting up of the fireplace for its important work. English square top firebacks of the "movable stamp" form of casting are represented by some fine examples, to which are added a goodly number of the more usual type brought over from Holland in the 17th Century.

The marble mantels are neither large nor elaborate, but have been selected for good quality, proportion, and suitability to the ordinary size of room. About thirty of these will be available for selection. Two finely carved Georgian pine mantels and overmantels lead the showing of wood mantels, which form a welcome addition to my already large collection. Grates, andirons, trivets, and all manner of interesting pieces of English iron and brasswork help to round out what I consider to be the most unique offering of this kind that has ever been brought together.

The shipment of these articles is now under way and to those who may be in New York a hearty invitation is extended to view them after June 5th, at 414, Madison Avenue. To those who are unable to visit my showrooms I would say that the descriptions given here are in every way reliable, and that I believe each piece to be genuine and of the period represented.

Everything is naturally offered subject to previous sale and the prices given have been carefully studied with a view to keeping them as moderate as possible. Should you desire to make a selection it would be advisable to communicate immediately with my office in New York.

LONDON, May 15th, 1923.
